

Bill The Stupid Frog

Chapter 1 by Cason Duncan

I would love to tell you a stupid story that I made off of the top of my head about a frog named Bill. Bill was a frog. He had a problem that seemed almost un-solvable. Bill does not know how to read. Although any somewhat reasonable human being would know that frogs don't read, Bill is a frog and doesn't know that. But since we are all kind people here today, we're not going to ruin this poor souls dreams just yet. Bill had to learn to read. Bill asked everyone that he knew if they can teach him how to read. Unfortunately, Bill can't talk, and neither can all Forty seven thousand, three hundred and ninety one rocks that Bill asked. Rocks, to Bills surprise, do not know how to read. Bill was sad. It took a long time to ask all forty seven thousand, three hundred and ninety one rocks just for Bill's soul to shatter and slowly and painfully rain down like shards of broken dreams and to find out rocks don't read. Bill really wanted to learn how to read. He had no one else to turn to, to teach him how to read. Just as Bill thought those exact thoughts, a large shadow cast itself above Bill's head. He ran behind Stevie, the thirty nine thousand, four hundred and twenty second rock that Bill asked. No one really liked him so Bill figured that no one would care if Stevie was hit by the object. It finally hit the ground. Bill walked over to the object and stared at it for a bit. It was a paper and it said: Learn how to Read.

"If rocks don't read," Bill thought, I was off on his way to visit all the birds he could, but not to the new with the rocks. So Bill the frog met many birds.

The first bird he found was Big Bird on his families TV station. We all know that not only is Big Bird not really a bird, but also frogs don't have TV's and if they did they would know not to expect an answer when they talked to someone on the TV. Fortunately for Bill, Big Bird was teaching little kids how to read during the show, but by the time Bill understood that the show was over.

The second bird Bill met was a Bald Eagle who just happened to be out finding dinner. He started to dive in to eat Bill, but it turns out that not only can Bill not read books, but he can't read prey or predators either.

Yep, he is done for now, Bill was in that eagles stomach. Since he had nothing to in there and no idea how to get out, Bill started talking and talking and talking about how he would never learn to read now.
